

Aging Families and Caregiver Program

About the Aging Families and Caregiver Program

The Aging Families and Caregiver Program is a partnership between the Family Therapy, Neuropsychology and Geriatric Psychiatry programs at Rhode Island and The Miriam hospitals and uses the McMaster Model of Family Functioning. It supports seniors and their families who are struggling with many of the challenges that come with aging, such as Alzheimer's disease and related dementia, medical illness, changes in functional abilities and housing, and loss and grief.

As a systems-based program, we not only help families adjust to these difficult challenges but help them identify and utilize a wide range of medical and community resources available to Rhode Island seniors and their families.

Challenges of Aging Families

Often, older families or their friends and relatives become concerned about changes that can occur with aging or age-related conditions. These can include:

- Declining memory
- Difficulty completing everyday tasks, such as paying bills, home care
- Driving problems
- Depression
- Anxiety and fear
- Personality changes, such as irritability and anger
- Distress about medical illnesses
- Family problems
